1. General process

Any legally established structure (non-profit, cooperative, de facto, private, company, etc.) or NGO can submit a project to the John Cockerill Foundation. Only structures with a purpose other than economic and commercial are eligible. Project submissions are made exclusively online (www.johncockerillfoundation.org) and are divided into two sections. Projects must not be of a religious or political nature.

The first stage, called eligibility, consists of checking your organization's legal information (document proving the existence of the structure or the details of a supporting structure) and the project's conformity with the eligibility criteria defined by the John Cockerill Foundation (see below). Notification is sent once this stage has been completed.

If the project is eligible, the second step is to prepare the selection file for presentation to the John Cockerill Foundation Selection Committee. It is this committee which selects the projects to be supported by the John Cockerill Foundation.

A notification and an email are sent when the application is completed in its entirety to be presented to the Selection Committee. An email is sent when the Selection Committee has reached a decision on the project.

During the selection phase, you can save your project and rework it as you wish before submitting it definitively. Each time you save, a new link is generated. You can choose to receive the link by e-mail and/or copy and save it. This link must not be shared and will expire after 30 days. After this period, your form will be deleted.

4. Follow-up on your submission

The members of the Selection Committee analyze and evaluate all the applications received and approved by the Program Manager. They preselect those that are likely to receive support from the John Cockerill Foundation.

The John Cockerill Foundation Program Manager is responsible for implementing, managing and monitoring the recommendations of the Selection Committee. The Program Manager will contact you at the end of the Selection Committee meeting, and will become your privileged contact person.

If your project is preselected by the Selection Committee, you enter the pre-agreement phase. During this phase, we re-analyze your application to see how we can best meet your needs. We then take the liberty of contacting you to discuss and obtain further information on the progress and implementation of your project. We will then get back to you to let you know whether or not the John Cockerill Foundation will support your project. In case of support, you will be invited to sign an agreement with the John Cockerill Foundation. This agreement sets out the details and terms of the John Cockerill Foundation's partnership with your project, as well as the long-term follow-up steps to be agreed upon.

The John Cockerill Foundation will then focus on delivering the support in accordance with the terms of the agreement. This phase will involve regular exchanges between the Project Working Group (internal to the Foundation) and your team, to ensure that the support is carried out in line with expectations. At the end of the project, a final assessment will be carried out.

5. How long does the project selection process take?

The project selection process is divided into three phases:

- The eligibility phase consists of checking your organization's legal information and verifying that the project complies with the eligibility criteria defined by the John Cockerill Foundation.
- The selection file consists of all the information needed for the Selection Committee to analyze the project.
- The Selection Committee's choice: at this stage, the Selection Committee decides on the projects (selection, postponement or refusal).
- Confirmation of your project's status by the Program Manager.

The whole process takes an average of 1 to 6 weeks.

6. What are the project eligibility criteria?

- Adherence to the John Cockerill Foundation charter
The project and all those involved undertake to respect the John Cockerill Foundation Charter.
- Is the project supported by a structure whose purpose is exclusively economic and commercial?
- Project in line with the UN's Sustainable Development Goals
The John Cockerill Foundation is committed to the Sustainable Development Goals defined by the United Nations. The project must be in line with at least one of the 17 SDGs.
- Project compliance with the core values of the John Cockerill Foundation
The project must be in line with all the core values advocated by the John Cockerill Foundation, namely:
HUMAN: We respect all human beings, and our values are openness, consideration, empathy and benevolence towards all.
COMMITTED: We take a stand and act to defend our values, we believe in what we do and we're proud of it.
RESPONSIBLE: We act thoughtfully and consider the consequences of our actions and inactions. We are all ambassadors of the John Cockerill Foundation's societal approach.
INNOVATIVE: We give priority to technical, technological, conceptual and methodological innovation, and seek to apply our creativity and originality to the causes we defend, using a progressive approach.
PROJECT-ORIENTED: Our priority is to implement concrete projects and solutions that meet community needs in a sustainable and collective way.
ETHICS: We act with respect for egalitarian, equitable and universal morality, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and fair practices.
- The project must fall within the scope of the John Cockerill Group's operational and commercial activities
- The project must concern a clearly identified or identifiable community
The John Cockerill Foundation's action is aimed at clearly identified or identifiable communities. The principle is to act concretely around oneself, on a local scale: at the level of a group of people, a community, a village, a town. The project must clearly identify who will benefit from it, and on what scale.
- The project must enable mixed support (distributive and operative)
The type of sponsorship granted by the John Cockerill Foundation will necessarily be a mixed sponsorship, i.e. a financial investment and an investment in skills/products/services... The John Cockerill Foundation relies on the expertise, know-how and skills of John Cockerill Group employees and can provide support in terms of technical implementation (design, manufacturing, etc.), logistics, etc. The John Cockerill Foundation does not contribute to a project solely in financial terms.

- The project must be ready for implementation and feasible in the medium term.
The presentation should include the main stages of implementation, as well as an outline budget.
- The project must have a long-term sustainable impact
Projects supported by the John Cockerill Foundation must have a long-term, sustainable impact on the beneficiary community.

All these criteria will be explained in detail in the selection section of the submission.

7. What are the project selection criteria?

Contribution of meaning

Communities around the world face multiple and complex challenges. The John Cockerill Foundation focuses its action on supporting and accompanying local projects in line with the UN's Sustainable Development Goals \(SDGs\), which affect an entire community rather than individual people. Our role is to provide support and guidance to make their living conditions as dignified as possible. That's why it's vital that your project emphasizes the importance of meaning in its implementation and results.

Ecological footprint of the project

The ecological footprint, i.e. the expression of the impact of an action on the planet's resources, is one of the challenges facing our society.

The concept of environmental impact refers to any change to the environment, positive or negative, resulting in whole or in part from an organization's activities, services or products, from conception to "end of life". There is no such thing as a product with zero environmental impact. Even so-called "green" products have negative impacts on the environment. Every product needs raw materials and energy to be manufactured or to function. All products need to be packaged and transported. Finally, even if recycled several times, all products and packaging will one day become waste.

With this in mind, your project should, for example, commit to controlling the mobility of people or equipment by promoting more ecological means of transport, controlling energy consumption and taking into account the limitation of waste, waste recycling and promoting the reuse of materials, local origin, short circuits...
